The start of a new year usually brings a bit of reminiscing about the year just passed and looking forward to goals, wishes, plans, and special events in the year ahead. PFSA celebrates its 40th anniversary this year, and I realize I have spent the past 25 of those 40 years as the organization’s president and CEO.

In many ways, we have “grown up” together. Looking back to my beginning with PFSA, then called Parents Anonymous of Pennsylvania, brings me smiles, laughter, and even a few head shakes.

Truth be told, I was not the top candidate for this job; I was the runner-up. I got the gold ring by default since the organization could not pay relocation costs for the first pick and his family. The organization had less than $40,000 in the bank, no fax machine (remember those?), and a ledger book for accounting. My first day saw me bringing my own desk chair and reminding myself not to ask, “Where is the computer?” Seriously?!

Back in the day, there were a few typewriter-produced and -copied handouts given to agencies for parents explaining the importance of not spanking or hitting their children. Training was limited to “how to facilitate a self-help support group,” and there was one program staff member. Another truth — taking this job was a hard decision. Maybe it was not my first choice, either. But I was young, very determined, and we have indeed managed to grow together. And grow this organization has!

PFSA has always held the cornerstone belief that consistent, positive parenting is the best step in preventing child abuse. It rings true today just as it did 40 years ago. Our commitment to educating and supporting parents and kinship care providers is as strong as ever.

Healthy and strong families are key to ensuring children are healthy, resilient and reach their full potential, and that’s why PFSA family support and education programs, administered by community-based child abuse prevention agencies, can be found in every region of our state.

Creating Stronger Families Through Education and Support

Most families share commonality with their struggles and challenges, but no two are identical, and the same is true of the communities in our state. That’s why each PFSA family support and education program has individual characteristics reflecting cultural relevancy of the community and its strength.

Prevention programs are most effective when they are flexible and responsive to the needs and strength of the community in which they are located.

Today, dozens of agencies statewide turn to PFSA for high-quality parenting publications, our acclaimed Families In Recovery parenting curriculum, and training to provide the evidence-based parenting program ACT: Raising Safe Kids. We welcome the opportunity to work with all child- and family-serving agencies dedicated to helping parents be their child’s hero for a lifetime.

The safety of Pennsylvania’s children is not just the child welfare system’s responsibility; it is also mine — and yours!

PFSA encourages individuals, the public and private sector, and all faith communities to understand and demonstrate that safeguarding vulnerable children is not just the job of an already-struggling parent or overburdened child welfare system.

We change the mindset of many through our comprehensive training program on child abuse recognition and reporting for volunteers and professionals. We impact the behavior of community members through an educational program, The Front Porch Project®, designed to teach folks how to safely intervene when a child in their midst is not safe.

We shift the culture in Pennsylvania through PFSA’s Blue Ribbon Champion for Safe Kids Campaign. This brings together media efforts, primary prevention messaging and blue ribbon events that help all citizens realize the magnitude of child abuse and neglect in the state they call home — and how they can make a positive impact!

New Programs Ahead in 2019

As we look ahead in this new 40th-anniversary year, here are just a few things in the works:

PFSA will launch Families In Recovery, a parenting program for parents who are in recovery from substance use disorder. This program is being piloted in 12 sites across our state, and Train-the-Trainer sessions are scheduled statewide. Visit www.pa-fsa.org to learn more and register!

PFSA will introduce parenting publications to help families establish their own social media policies and parents set healthy boundaries for their children around screen time and handheld electronic devices. Our parenting series will expand to include topics such as parenting transgender youth and support for same-gender parents.

PFSA has joined with PA Dept. of Human Services to develop and pilot a specialized training program for residential child care facilities to address potential over-reporting to ChildLine without reasonable suspicion of child abuse.

Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow: Let’s Work Together to #ProtectPAKids

For as much as things change, there are so many that remain steadfast. PFSA has updated semantics and graduated from a fax machine and typewriter as the years have passed, but our mission and our vision are the same. Our program services, advocacy, and public relations — all we do is aimed at preparing and encouraging every individual who comes into contact with children to safeguard them.

Another steadfast at PFSA is the remarkable staff, colleagues, board members, volunteers, donors, and stake holders who give of their resources day in and day out to make sure PFSA’s quality training, support, and education programs are available to those who need them most. There is always room for more to join our efforts, so if I am “preaching to the choir,” please share our message with others you know.

As for me, I have gray hair, and I am now a grandmother myself. I don’t make as many trips to and from Pittsburgh in the same day as I once did. I definitely know all 67 PA counties, and I have a much deeper understanding of and appreciation for how much progress can be made when we all join together and build upon our strengths.

And I finally threw out the typewriter!

Greetings and Happy New Year!

I hope our newsletter finds you in warm post-holiday spirits and well on your way to achieving your New Year’s resolutions — whatever they may be!

Did you know that January is National Mentor Month? The annual month-long event:
► Promotes youth mentoring
► Raises awareness of the positive impact a mentor has on outcomes for youngsters
► Highlights the rewards mentorship holds for individuals, businesses, schools, neighborhoods, and communities of faith

Mentoring can occur directly or indirectly. Any time you show your commitment to the wellbeing of others, you have touched someone’s life through mentorship!

My Mentor: Gammie

For me, January is a month of contemplation and reflection. We receive the chance for moments of meditation and self-awareness at the start of each new year. Time to consider the experiences of the year past, how we have grown from challenges, and the memories we cherish and hold in our hearts — all reminders of what we value most.

As I prepare this newsletter, the first of 2019, I want to share my most treasured of reflections with you: a note of gratitude to my own Blue Ribbon Champion.

My person shares a January birthday with another very special individual, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Like Dr. King, my grandMother worked as an activist, an example of non-violent protest to promote change, and called on fellow citizens to contribute to public service and the well-being of her Pennsylvania community.

Like many grandParents today, my grandMother unexpectedly found herself in the reversed parenting role due to the crack-cocaine epidemic of the 1980s and early ’90s. She received a startling call in the middle of the night during a record-breaking blizzard. At 49, she exchanged the experience of grandparenting to assume full supervision of me, singlehandedly caring for all the needs of a 5-year-old child and seeing that responsibility through to my adulthood.

Without her profound resourcefulness, commitment to my well-being, and extraordinary personal sacrifices, I may not have grown into a nurtured and contributing member of society.

It is my credo now that “I am, because she was.”

Kayla Kressler, PFSA Director of Prevention Programs, with her (grand) Mother at her graduation.
In March 2018, Gammie (as all endearingly called her) finally received her long-overdue angel wings. Just one month later, I joined the PFSA family, and as I approach my first anniversary here, I am filled with humility and gratitude.

Every day, I am gifted opportunities to cross paths with remarkable individuals — our team, passionate child welfare and family support professionals, community members, grandparents and kinship caregivers, and volunteers from various walks of life.

Through these first nine months, a page has turned, and though I feel sad at times, this new page has given me a new lens through which to experience grief: With grace, gratitude, and countless opportunities to pay it forward to my Blue Ribbon Champion.

Won’t You Tell Us About Your Blue Ribbon Champion?

As we journey into the new year here at PFSA, I am especially looking forward to the high-energy planning, activities, and experiences during National Child Abuse Prevention Month in April — when PFSA honors individuals from across the commonwealth for their exceptional contributions to the prevention of child abuse and neglect. These Blue Ribbon Champions for Safe Kids serve by example, working in Pennsylvania to protect children. We deeply value those professionals, volunteers, and everyday heroes.

I encourage you, from time to time, to consider those individuals who have had a profound impact on your life! Keep space for them in your heart and your daily work. On days where repetition, stress and the unappealing demands of life and work pull on your energy, pausing to consider those who have contributed to your development can reset your momentum and shift your perspective.

Consider an individual you admire today, whose character and actions represent your idea of a Blue-Ribbon Champion, and nominate them for their efforts. May we all commit to a shared 2019 resolution: To continue paying it forward to each other and, most importantly, to our PA kids!

Please visit our Blue Ribbon Campaign website at pablueribbonchampion.org to submit your nomination today.
